REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE BENEVOLENT, OR
STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY,
FOR THE YEAR 1816.

IN presenting the Report of the proceedings of this Institution during the last year, the Committee have to congratulate the Subscribers and Benefactors; on the increasing patronage which this important Charity continues to receive from a benevolent Public. It would be superfluous, after more than thirty years of active exertions to enlarge upon the nature and design of the STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, with which the Subscribers in general are already so well acquainted, and it might only be necessary for the Committee to present a statement of the income and expenditure of the past year, with an account of a few of the cases visited and relieved; but as this publication may fall into the hands of some benevolent persons not previously acquainted with the Society, it may be proper to state that its sole object is to visit the sick and distressed poor, and to relieve them according to their necessities, and as the funds of the Institution will admit.

It is a peculiar character of this Society, that it attends to the wants of the poor at a time, and in a manner, best calculated to impart effectual aid. Every case of distress which appears to be genuine, throughout London, Westminster, and Southwark, that comes to the knowledge of the Committee and Visitors, is personally enquired into, at the place of residence, which is the only means to avoid imposition; and no preference is given to either sect or nation, except indeed to the Stranger in distress, and to those who appear to be of good moral character.

In the course of the last year (1815) six thousand, nine hundred and seventy-five Cases, have been visited and relieved by the Society, the greater part consisting of families. Not less than thirty-four thousand, five hundred separate visits have been paid, and the sum of two thousand, eight hundred, and ninety six pounds has been distributed.

It would be impossible to estimate the benefits resulting to the individuals themselves, and also to the community at large, from the weekly intercourse of nearly three hundred Visitors from this Society with the poor in every part of the metropolis; who, while they convey to them the bounty of the rich, constantly endeavour to infuse a sense of obligation and respect to their superiors in society.

But Christian Charity will not limit itself to the temporal necessities of human nature, it will take advantage of that access which the relief of these necessities opens to the heart, to instruct the ignorant, and to warn and counsel those who have wandered from the paths of virtue. The hours of depression and sorrow, will be taken as fit occasions to point the sufferers to the only durable and solid felicity of man; and Christian benevolence will, by every kind and prudent method, attempt to reclaim the wicked from the error of their way,—to instruct the ignorant in the true knowledge of salvation,—and to comfort the dejected and the mourner.

Through the blessing of God upon the endeavours of the Visitors, in very many instances, the moral condition of the poor has been greatly improved. Multitudes of Children who had been brought up in a state of total ignorance, have through their recommendation been sent to SUNDAY SCHOOLS, where they have acquired habits of regularity, and an acquaintance with those Holy Scriptures which inculcate their various duties to God and man. Nor is this all, for many of the parents, accompanied by their children, now frequent the ordinances of public worship, who had previously neglected the Sabbath-day, and a degree of order and decorum prevails in their families, to which heretofore they had been utter strangers.

It has been often stated in the annual Reports of this Society, that street beggars, are not in general, suitable objects of charity; as they are frequently impostors, and spend their idle gains in habits of gross profligacy. This has been fully proved, by “The Report of a Committee of the House of Commons on the state of mendicity in the metropolis ;” made 11th of July, 1815. The evidence published in that report developes much of the misapplication of charity when bestowed on street beggars, and points out the necessity and advantage, of personal visits and enquiries, in order to ascertain real objects of benevolence.

On reference to that interesting report, it will appear that the mendicants who infest the streets of the metropolis, are with very few exceptions, idle and profligate characters : whereas the really decent and deserving poor, are unobtrusive, and require to be sought out and followed in their retired distress.

But there is a higher class of mendicants, whose exactions on public benevolence, have been carried in many instances, to a degree almost incredible, by artfully written tales of distress, which are frequently without foundation.* The Committee are far from wishing it to be understood that all who obtain relief in this way, are

* The following is a recent instance of this kind that has come under the notice of one of the Secretaries of this Institution. A person of high rank, who a short time since became acquainted with the Strangers' Friend Society, and contributed liberally to its funds, wished a Member of the Committee to investigate the circumstances of a family, who, in the course of a few days, had obtained by artful representations of extreme distress, no less a sum than fourteen pounds, from the same benevolent individual. The time chosen for this investigation was late on Saturday Evening, when instead of that misery which had been stated, the Visitor found the man and his wife, with some associates, in a state of intoxication, surrounding a table, regaling themselves on a fine piece of pickled salmon, with plenty of porter and a bottle of gin before them ; and on a side table, a large sirloin of beef intended for their Sunday's dinner.

unworthy of it, but they wish to suggest to the consideration of benevolent individuals, that they insure to their charitable donations, a far more just and efficient application, by visiting the abodes of the poor, or by distributing their bounty through the medium of Societies of this nature; than when they bestow alms merely from the unauthenticated representations and importunities, of the objects themselves.

The Committee had last year to regret the loss of their highly respected Secretary, Robert Middleton, Esq. who had removed to a distant part of the kingdom, after rendering the most essential services to the Society; by giving up a large portion of his valuable time; by his indefatigable labours; and by his liberal contributions for the space of fourteen years. They have now to record the death of their late worthy Treasurer, WM. MARRIOTT, Esq. who commenced his public services to the Institution in the year 1800, after having been for many years preceding, a liberal private benefactor; and for the space of sixteen years, the time of his Treasurership, sedulously attended the Meetings of the Committee, except when prevented by illness, or absence from London.

The Committee are unwilling to obtrude any private history of their Members on the notice of the Subscribers, but the extraordinary worth of their late Treasurer, deserves to be recorded, and to be had in remembrance; that his virtues may excite imitation.

A brighter example of industry, prudence, frugality and benevolence, has seldom been manifested, than for a very long series of years was exemplified by the late Mr. Marriott.

Diligent in his business—exact in all his accounts—punctual to all his engagements—pious towards God—and extensive in his contributions to the poor, and to the stranger in distress ; his memory demands a sacred place in the annals of the STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Besides his liberal subscriptions to a great variety of public charities, his heart and his purse, were always open to the calls of private distress, whenever its claims were, in his judgment, well founded ; and although very active in his personal beneficent exertions, yet, his heart devised more liberal things than his own hands could possibly accomplish. He therefore employed several others as his almoners to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to administer medicine to the sick, to instruct the ignorant, and to relieve the distressed : but all this was done under the strictest injunctions of secrecy ; for such was his unostentatious genuine spirit of charity, that much of his extensive benevolence was not known to his own family, or intimate friends, till after his decease ; indeed they really knew less of the disposal of his bounty, than even strangers, and there is great reason to believe, that much of what he did will never be known by any human being, till the resurrection of the just.

He was a man of deep piety and unfeigned humility, therefore his acts of beneficence were for the pure purposes of doing good to his fellow creatures, and of glorifying God. To receive the praises of man he studiously avoided. He rigidly attended to the spirit of that command—"When thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."

His education was finished in a school at Madeley, in Shropshire, under the eye of that most eminent character the Rev. John Fletcher, Vicar of Madeley, who was intimate with his excellent parents; and who paid the greatest attention to the best interests of all his parishioners, and especially to the youth, in endeavouring to form their minds for the paths of virtue and piety. Mr. Fletcher invited the scholars of the seminary, where young Mr. Marriott was placed, to spend an hour with him every morning in his study, when he took uncommon pains to inculcate the principles of christianity in the most captivating and persuasive manner. In a paper found since Mr. Marriott's death, deposited with his Will, written many years after he had left school, and indeed three years after the death of Mr Fletcher, he particularly records, among many other blessings from heaven, the especial benefit he received under the instructions of that heavenly-minded man, when at school at Madeley.

Mr. Marriott's father, at an early period of life introduced his Son into business, which he conducted with so much diligence, regularity, and probity, that his connections soon encreased, and his affairs so flourished, under the blessing of God, that in a few years he acquired considerable property, which was daily increased by the frugal and regular, though not parsimonious habits, which he adopted in domestic life.

Finding the bounty of heaven pouring down upon him, and feeling a grateful heart for the blessings of providence, he was anxious to communicate to others of what he had so freely received, and after making what he considered a suitable provision for his family, his next chief care was how he should dispose of the surplus of his annual income, in that way, which would do most good to mankind. He presently adopted a very excellent system.

Many widows and infirm persons, and other necessitous poor with large families, have been supplied weekly by Mr. Marriott with bread, for a course of from six to twelve years, without their ever knowing from what quarter the supply came. His charity had no bounds but the limits of his income, and was not more commendable for its extent, than for the manner in which it was exercised. He supported two schools, for the instruction of 100 poor children, for above 20 years, paying the salaries of the masters, providing books, and partly clothing the children.

His liberality was not confined to any denomination of Christians, but comprehended the necessitous of all parties. He belonged to a society, for the relief of Clergymen of the Church of England of small stipends, and he often sent an extra donation to them, and to other ministers, by post, without informing them whence it came. A pious Dissenter was also one of his Almoners, who in the course of 27 years, distributed for him some thousands of pounds, and relieved about 9,000 cases of distress, of which he has given an accurate account. In times of scarcity, this person has purchased five hundred, or a thousand pounds weight of rice, and distributed it to the poor according to the number in their families. Another person, a Methodist, has received from him forty guineas a year, for twenty-four years, for charitable distribution.

There are other persons who have been employed in the same way, but who are not personally known to his family: the above two instances of his liberality, were tutterly unknown to them, till after his decease. He paid the rent of some houses in Spital Fields, for many years, in which a number of reduced widows, to whom he allowed regular pensions, found a comfortable asylum.

On Mr. Marriott's birth day, December 16, 1788, (being then thirty-five years of age) he made a particular memorandum in his private papers, which he entitled "A catalogue of some of the innumerable mercies of God to me, for which I desire to be always thankful;" and among many other excellent observations he remarks, "I desire to praise God, also, for his blessing on my temporal concerns; for that degree of success with which I have been favoured in business, so as to be enabled to provide all things convenient for myself and household; and also to have to administer to the necessities of others. And I desire to praise him, as well for the inclination, as for the ability so to do; this also is of God,—To him be all the glory."

In his diary at the close of this year, he wrote as follows:—1788, Dec. 27. "This day I cast up my accounts," (which was his uniform practice at the end of every year,) "and find that God still continues to prosper me in my temporal concerns, and I thank him, that he also vouchsafes me grace to employ some of that substance to his more immediate service, in endeavouring to promote the knowledge of himself amongst mankind, and in the relief of the members of his mystical body.* May I now abundantly through his grace devise liberal things, and still more especially be rich in faith, and have a treasure in the heavens, that ‘neither moth nor rust can corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal.’ ”

To avoid the appearance of any thing like ostentation, Mr. Marriott would frequently give but a single guinea publicly to a charity, when he would afterwards send a large contribution privately.—Few men were ever more sensible of the danger of riches, and of the evil of covetousness than Mr. Marriott, and from an early period in life, he set apart a considerable portion of his property to charitable purposes.—He fixed a certain bound to his income, beyond which he would not accumulate, in consequence of which, his money for charitable purposes was doubled and trebled till the year 1800, when it considerably exceeded half his income.

In kindness to the poor, he certainly “excelled among the excellent,” for with Zaccheus he could literally say, “behold Lord the half of my goods I give to the poor.” Yet so far was he from thinking highly of his own liberality, that in one part of his diary he writes as follows : August 22. “Hearing of a family in distressing circumstances, those words in St. John’s 1st Epistle were much impressed on my mind, ‘Whoso hath this worlds goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him.’ Alas ! I have not that degree of tenderness for the distressed which I ought to have, neither have I been so faithful as I might have been in the unrighteous mammon, otherwise I should have possessed more of the true riches. Lord help me to improve this talent more to thine honour.”

Having acquired what he considered an ample provision for his wife and children, he determined to accumulate no more ; and for the last few years of his life, he reserved no more to himself than would pay his expences for house-keeping. His private cash book always closed at the end of the year with “ I am possessed of £.—(naming the sum) more than I owe,” under which he wrote some such pious reflections as the following, viz.

1798. “ Lord grant me a sanctified use of every blessing, to thy glory, my own comfort, and the benefit of others, for Christ’s sake. Amen.”

1800. “ O Lord save me from the love of money, and help me to employ this and every talent to thine honour, through Jesus Christ. Amen.”

He continued to make similar remarks at the close of every year in his private cash book, and the last he made was on the 31 December, 1814. viz. “ Blessed be God for all, but above all, for Jesus Christ as the Saviour. Amen.”

In the year 1800, Mr. Marriott was chosen Treasurer of the Strangers’ Friend Society, and he most conscientiously and assiduously discharged the duties of his office, so long as his health permitted. He was, as has been hinted, on no occasion absent from the meetings of the Committee for nearly sixteen years, except when prevented by illness or distance from Town, and the latter was very seldom the case.

His annual subscription to this institution of late years was twenty guineas, but he has frequently given credit for considerable sums anonymously, which there is good reason to believe came from himself.

As a proof of the public confidence and respect which he enjoyed, he was also chosen Treasurer to several other benevolent and religious Institutions.

In the year 1801, he was nominated by the Lord Mayor, for the Office of Sheriff for London and Middlesex, but he did not consider himself calculated to discharge the duties of that public station. He felt that his talents could be more usefully employed for mankind, in private than in public life, and he therefore paid the usual fine of four hundred pounds and twenty marks, to be excused from taking that office; but he continued doing good privately in various ways, all the days of his life, according to his health and ability.

He re-made, or altered his will from time to time according to the circumstances of his family, and after having provided for his widow and children, and other friends, he left very handsome Legacies to several Charities of which he had a high opinion: and among others, two hundred pounds to the Strangers' Friend Society: he also bequeathed a very considerable sum to charitable uses, at the discretion of his two sons and Mr. Middleton, the late Secretary of the Strangers' Friend Society, and Mr. Rance his medical friend, all of whom he appointed his Trustees for this purpose.*

The following memorandum was found with his will. "Being sensible of the importance of the undermentioned Scriptures, as well as of many more of the like import, viz. 'A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.' 'What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul.' 'How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.' 'Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches,' &c. &c. I have every time I have cast up my accounts, set apart some portion of my gains (according as God hath prospered me) as sacred for charitable uses, which I have put into a drawer, in my desk, or have made a memorandum, mentioning so much due to that drawer, called the 'poor's drawer.' I desire the Trustees named in my will jointly, and the survivors of them, to appropriate and apply the same to such charitable purposes, as they shall judge will promote the glory of God, and the happiness of man, according to their discretion."

For a considerable time before his decease, he had been attacked by a nervous fever,

On Friday, 30th June, 1815, his fever encreased, and he appeared to have a conviction of his approaching dissolution. He spent the principal part of the day in settling his affairs, and in destroying various papers which he wished should not be seen; among these were many receipts relative to his private charities. His eldest Son, William, happened to call towards the evening to see him, and finding him rather worse than usual, sent for a physician, who came immediately. As he went up to bed, he told the servant he should never come down any more.

On Monday, 3d of July, his younger Son, Thomas, called in the afternoon, and found him worse. In a few minutes after his son entered his room, he was seized with a strong convulsive fit, in which he remained nearly half an hour. Those who were present in the room, knelt down and prayed earnestly to God, that he might be enabled to say a few words for the consolation of his family and friends. As he came out of the fit he said to his son, "I shall not die but live, and declare the wondrous works of God; that is," he continued, "I shall not die immediately, but shall live a few days longer:" and in the few days which he did live, he declared to those around him the wonderful mercy of God, his confidence in him, and his triumph over death and the grave.

During his illness, he most fully proved that the end of a good man is peace. He said to a friend, "I find peace, and have no fear of death."

He abounded with comfortable and animating expressions to his family and friends; and had most correct scriptural views and hopes of eternal happiness, not depending on his own good works, but entirely on the mercy of God, through the merits of Jesus Christ. On one occasion, after praying fervently aloud for the space of five minutes, when he had concluded his prayer, he said, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; yea saith the spirit, for they rest from their labours and their works follow them. Not go before them," he added, "for there is no merit."*

The febrile symptoms of the disease being considerably mitigated, and his strength of body having very little declined, Dr. Hamilton and Mr. Rance, his medical attendants, thought his recovery probable, provided no local affection took place; but on Saturday Morning, the 15th

* See the 12th Article of the Church of England.

July, his lungs began to be affected, which indicated some effusion in the chest. His respiration was difficult and laborious, and as this encreased, all hope of his restoration was cut off.

About noon, one of his children asking if he should moisten his mouth with some currant juice, he said, "Yes: for my bones are burnt up like a potsherd; I am brought into the dust of death." While his son held him up in bed and gave him the currant juice, he said, "God be your protector and eternal portion: live for God alone." On being asked whether he would choose any particular text for his funeral sermon, he said, "No: only let me be hid in the dust, and God alone be glorified." He soon after said, "I have not twenty-four hours to live." and lifting up his eyes towards heaven, he expressed his resignation by adding, "Not my will, but thine be done." During a great part of the day he appeared to be engaged in earnest prayer. The last prayer he was heard to utter, was with a faltering voice, about eleven o'clock on Saturday night; that God would enable him "so to pass through things temporal, as finally to obtain the joys eternal." In a short time afterwards he finished his earthly course in peace, and entered upon an eternal Sabbath in the full triumph of faith, on the 15th July, 1815.; and in the Sixty-third Year of his Age.* His character has been given to the following effect.; viz.

* Mrs. Marriott, who had been an active kind woman in relieving the poor, particularly poor lying-in women, whom she furnished with boxes of linen, &c. was in a very enfeebled state of health during the last illness of her husband, whom she survived only nineteen days. She died in peace, August 4th, 1815.

Sacred to the Memory of WILLIAM MARRIOTT, Esq.

Who was born December 16th, 1753,

And died July 15th, 1815,

Steadfast in faith, Joyful in hope,

And rich in good works.

He enjoyed in early life the instructions and pious care

Of the VENERABLE FLETCHER;

And was favoured for many subsequent years

With the public Ministry and private friendship,

Of that apostolic man

The Rev. JOHN WESLEY;

Of whose Society he was a steady Member,

And of whose last Will he was one of the Executors.

In domestic life,

He was orderly, affectionate, and exemplary;

In his relations to civil Society,

Sternly upright and eminently useful.

As a Christian,

He feared God above many,

Loved our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity,

And looked for his mercy unto eternal life.

As a Member of a Religious Society,

He was uniform in his attachments,

Consistent in his conduct,

And active in supporting by his exertions,

His example, and his influence,

The good cause which he had conscientiously espoused.

In kindness to the Poor,

And every other branch of Christian Beneficence,

He excelled among the excellent.

The Committee of the Strangers' Friend Society, have to apologize for having said so much of their departed friend, but his singular worth, and the obligations which this Society is under to his fostering care, seemed to require some tribute to his memory.

It only remains to be added, that his younger Son Mr. Thomas Marriott, most assiduously and efficiently attended to the concerns of this Society during Mr. Marriott's long indisposition, and his elder Son, Mr. William Marriott, has now been chosen Treasurer to the Institution, to succeed his ever-to-be-respected father.

The government of this Society is in a Committee chosen from the Subscribers, who elect a general Treasurer and Secretaries. The Committee have divided London and its suburbs into districts, in each of which a Sub-committee is formed, who appoint suitable persons as Visitors, and meet with them every week to receive reports of the cases visited, and of the new cases that have been received, and to apportion suitable relief. A deputation from each Sub-committee meets the General Committee on the first Friday in every month, to give an account of the money expended, and the number of cases then on the books, to pay the donations and subscriptions that have been received, into the hands of the General Treasurer; and to receive from him such a sum of money as the number of cases demands. The Committee do not require any recommendation to obtain the help of the Society for cases of affliction; in whatever way the Visitors come to the knowledge of any existing distress, the objects are visited with promptitude, and relieved, if the Case appear to be genuine.

Cases of distress forwarded to any of the following persons will be attended to as soon as possible, viz.

—ooo—

Many families and individuals have been found by this Society so completely stripped of their apparel, as to be unable after the return of health, to gain any employment for want of a decent appearance ; and the funds of this Charity not being by any means adequate to the purchase of even the coarsest clothing, the Committee were induced to take this subject into consideration, when it was determined, that a proper person should be appointed in each of the seven districts, into which London and its Suburbs are divided, for the purpose of receiving donations of cast-off or useless clothing, or any other cheap articles of apparel ; and that the friends and benefactors of the Institution should be earnestly requested to furnish such articles as they can conveniently spare, and to recommend the same to others.

Apparel, for either men or women, boys or girls ; also blankets, sheets, &c. will be thankfully received, and appropriated with great care to the most necessitous and prudent of the poor, by being sent to any of the following places.

District No. 1, Messrs. OWEN and ELLIOTT, 31, Gutter-lane, Cheapside ;

2. Mr. MATHISON, 52, Great Queen-street,
Lincoln's-inn-fields ;

3. Mr. TRIMBY, 125, Whitechapel ;

4. Mr. COLLINS, Fox's-lane, Shadwell ;

5. Mr. THOMAS WRIGHT, 2, Mount-street, near Lambeth-marsh Turnpike ;

6. Mr. HOBBS, 119, Oxford-street ;

7. Mr. SPRATT, 2, Brewer-street, Pimlico.

A few of the cases which lately came under the notice of the Society are subjoined, which will give the Subscribers some general idea of the distress which the Visitors are frequently called to witness.

CASES VISITED

BY THE

CASE I.

A poor woman of the name of MORSE, living at 25, Market Lane, St. James's; when first visited was lying-in of twins. She had four other children, out of which number one only was able to work, and he earned four shillings a week at a Tobacconist's in the neighbourhood. Four months previous to her confinement she lost the use of her limbs, and was incapable of moving from her bed except upon crutches, and consequently could do nothing for herself and family. Her husband was a brewers labourer, but had been ill eight weeks, and was then confined to the same bed with his wife and children: he was in a sick club, but not being yet free, did not derive any benefit from it. Their apartment was extremely wretched. They had no help but the occasional and gratuitous assistance of a poor neighbour. The relief afforded by the Society was of the utmost service to them.

Since they were first visited, the twins have both died; others of the children have had the small pox;—the woman has recovered in a degree the use of her limbs;—but the man's complaint seems to be a settled decline; he is confined to his bed, and still on the books of the Society.

CASE II.

ANN WARD, No. 6, Cato Street, Edgware Road; a widow with six children, and expecting, when first visited, to ly-in again. Her husband about two months previous to this period, was a patient in St. George's Hospital, and so much recovered, that in a few days she expected him home. While in a pregnant state, she had been subject to a distressing complaint in her legs; on this account he would not allow her to walk to see him, but obtained leave to go home to see his family: he had put on his hat for this purpose, when he was seized with a fit, never spoke afterwards, and was brought to his poor wife and children a corpse. Her affliction and distress may be imagined, but cannot be described. Shortly after his decease, the complaint in her legs broke out, and rendered her nearly incapable of doing any thing for her family, all of whom are young. The rent of her dwelling was due: she had much difficulty in raising it, but by the sale of some of her few things, and help from a benevolent gentlemen, to whose liberality the Society is greatly indebted, the sum required was raised a few days after she had been put to bed of her seventh child. At the end of a fortnight she was obliged to remove, and her eldest child, a girl of about nine years old, took for her poor mother, two small apartments, at No. 16, in the same street, where she now dwells and having a mangle, endeavours by the use of it, to maintain her family.

Those who have visited this case, have felt much gratified on witnessing the piety and resignation of this poor woman; afflicted, but not forsaken; cast down in the depths of poverty, but not destroyed; having of worldly good nothing, she hath in religion possessed all things. She simply declared to one of the Committee who visited her, that it was as good as food to herself, to kneel down and ask bread for her children of her Father who is in heaven. She is still greatly distressed in her circumstances, and considered by the Society as an object worthy of commiseration.

CASE III.

The Committee have to record a Case of rather an unusual nature. The wife of CHARLES WILFORD, a journeyman shoemaker, residing at No. 10, James Street, Manchester Square; was visited and relieved by the Society during an illness which terminated in her death. There is good reason to believe, that the instructions of the Visitors were much blessed to her, and that her end was peace. A few days after her interment, her husband a feeble, infirm, and deaf old man, in his seventy sixth year, presented himself to the Committee to return thanks for the affectionate attention and advice, which his deceased partner had received. He stated, that from a club of which he was a member, he had received a sum for her funeral expences; and that after every thing was discharged, a surplus remained of five shillings—it was his all—and with many tears he tendered it to the Society, as a token of his gratitude for the benefit he, as well as his late wife had received, through its instrumentality. The person to whom he addressed himself, felt doubtful as to the propriety of receiving this evidently free-will offering from the old man—he reminded him of his age, and suggested many ways in which such a sum might be beneficial to himself. This backwardness to receive his gift appeared to pain him much, and caused him to urge his request with greater earnestness. Being asked what he had to rely on for future support—“ these hands !” he energetically replied, “ and the God I have heard of, from the kind friends who visited my wife.” This reply was enough, and honouring the spirit by which he was actuated ; the Donation of the poor man was received into the treasury of the Society : a friend of the Institution struck with admiration at this noble act, determined he should be no loser, and himself rewarded him with a liberal sum.

CASE IV.

ANN GRAVES, No. 7, Union Street, Lambeth Walk ; when first visited from this Society was in a very distressed state of body and mind, having no covering for herself or new born infant, owing to a very heavy loss her husband had sustained, by the seizure of a boat which he had borrowed, being a fisherman. The boat having been newly painted, and the owners name not put on again, it was seized, and the man was sent into confinement until he paid the fine, which occasioned great distress to the family. They were under the necessity of selling every thing they had in order to raise the money. The woman had not a single article left; but the misery of this case was greatly augmented by the following circumstance:—her husband rose very early the next morning, after his liberation, to go fishing, bid her good bye, and said he should be home at seven o'clock: But he never returned. The boat upset, and he was drowned.

The poor woman was supplied with several necessary articles of clothing from this Society, and relieved according to the state of the funds.

CASE V.

A family named BARKER, residing at No. 27, Featherstone Street, City Road; was recommended to the notice of the Society in the month of September last. The Visitor found no less than seven persons afflicted with a putrid fever, which was introduced into the family by one of the daughters about fourteen years of age, who had been out to service. Finding herself unwell, she came home to her friends in hopes of being able soon to return again to her situation. Her disorder proving to be a malignant fever, the infection was caught by one after another of the family, until the father and six children were ill with the disease at the same time. The father had been long the subject of bodily affliction, and their support greatly depended on the exertions of the eldest son, who being now confined with the rest, their situation became truly distressing; all resources for maintenance being cut off, except the charity of a few friends who knew their condition. The Visitors were much pleased with the cleanliness of the apartments where so many were lying ill. They were all attended by the mother. She was the only person that escaped the infection, and it was a merciful interposition of providence that she was enabled (though in much weakness) to wait upon them. They were visited and relieved during the space of six weeks, and then they all recovered and expressed much gratitude to God, and to all concerned in this Institution, for the timely relief afforded to them.

CASE VI.

Concerning the following Case a Visitor writes thus:—
“ I was induced to visit ELIZABETH WALKER, at No. 3, Barker's Buildings, Lamb's Alley, Bishospgate, from the importunity of a boy about seven years of age, who came to my door offering artificial flowers for sale at a very low price; saying, ‘ do take them, my mother is lying-in, and has had but one bit of bread all day.’ I took down the address, and went on the following day to ascertain the truth of his story, and found the mother and an infant lying on a broken bedstead, with only one blanket and a coat to cover them, and in a very weak condition, through want of proper nourishment. Her husband was also there in a deplorable situation, having neither coat, waistcoat, nor stockings; being obliged to pledge them to keep the family from starving. She informed me that in her former husband's time they were in good circumstances, keeping twelve and sometimes fourteen persons employed in the above business; but not being contented with the lot which providence had assigned them, he went to America, and died soon after his arrival there; being thus left a widow with one child, (the boy before mentioned) she worked hard for their support until she was married to her present husband who was a sea-faring man. He had been discharged about eighteen months ago, and has not been since able to obtain employment for more than three months, which had reduced them to their present pitiable situation." Relief was given them for several weeks: also some cast-off clothing which had been sent to the Society, was given to the man, which enabled him to go out and seek after employment, and both of them acknowledged with tears of gratitude the goodness of God in thus helping them in the time of their extremity."

CASE VII.

ANN DAVIS. No. 12, Ironmonger Row, St. Luke's; a widow with three children, was found confined by an inflammation which had fallen into her legs, with which she had been afflicted several months. Upon enquiry into her circumstances, the Visitor was informed, that her husband was by trade a bed-pillar carver, who after an illness of nine months, (by which they were much reduced in circumstances) died; leaving her with two children, (the eldest of which is afflicted with water in the head,) and in a pregnant state with the third, of which she was delivered about five months after his decease. During her lying-in she caught a violent cold which produced an inflammation in her eyes, and deprived her of sight for three weeks; after the recovery of sight, the inflammation settled in her legs, and rendered her unable to work for a livelihood, or attend to the duties of her family. Since the loss of her husband, she found a friend in her brother, who kindly contributed towards her support, but he being removed by death, she was left in a very deplorable situation, and is at this time on the books of the Society, receiving weekly what the state of the funds will admit.

CASE VIII.

E. BAINTON, No. 8, Hart Street, Grosvenor Square; a stable keeper's servant, was on the 24th December, riding a horse belonging to his master through Knights-bridge, when it took fright, ran away with him, and came in contact with the horses of a stage coach, fell, and rolled upon him. By this accident he was much hurt—completely laid up—and since that time has been unable to do any work; remaining for a long time under the care of a Surgeon, who has given the poor man a written testimony of the regularity of his conduct while under his observation. He has a wife and three children, and his family has had much affliction.—Six years ago they were living in comfort, having two furnished rooms, she following the business of a mantua-maker; but one sickness after another has quite reduced them: he has paid as much as one hundred pounds for medical help. Good furniture and clothes have been sold and pawned, till all is gone, and they are now destitute, amidst rags and wretchedness. They have been visited by the Society for some time, and relieved as far as the funds would allow. Sunday last he came to return thanks for the relief afforded him, and to solicit a continuance of the visits, his wife and one child being ill: she with a large gathering on her left hand, which prevents her doing any thing. He brought a letter written by her, which indicated that from the conversation of the Visitors, they had been much instructed. A Member of the Committee called on the following morning, and found them indeed in a deplorable condition. They must have gone without breakfast, had not a person in an adjoining room sent them a little bread. Amongst other articles they have sold, she enumerates with particular regret a book entitled “Hervey’s Meditations,” which they had taken in, in numbers. Her husband hawked it about, till he got eighteen pence for it. After it, a Bible went, for two shillings. The woman said she regretted this more than all. She had begun to read it with delight; “I wept the whole of the day,” said she “but my children were crying for food, and what could a mother do?”

CASE IX.

SUSAN PARLINGTON was put to bed of twins in January last, she had previously three children, and her husband, a stone mason by trade, had been long out of work: they occupied a small garrett, No. 5, Upper Ogle Street, and were found by a Visitor of the Strangers' Friend Society in the utmost distress—the woman had scarcely any thing to cover either herself or infants—no person to assist her—destitute of all nourishing support; it was in vain she attempted, by putting her new born babes to her exhausted breasts, to quiet their cries, which appeared to remain unreplenished for want of nourishment. She had been in bed two or three days, and by often rising and endeavouring to nurse them, had almost worn herself out; racked with pain, and full of fever, she seemed to be in most dangerous circumstances, while her husband unable to help her, and nearly driven to despair, was bemoaning their sad condition. He belonged to a parish in the City, and had applied for relief, but they would only agree to pay the rent of his room, during the time of his wife's confinement. To add to the affliction of this family, their eldest boy, at the age of three years, had had a paralytic stroke, and though now more than eight years old, is unable to go up or down stairs, or to walk unassisted. Such help as could be afforded was promptly given. The poor man was cheered and encouraged. The Case was named to some benevolent persons, and a degree of interest excited in their behalf, which they appear worthy of. She has recovered, and came with her children a fortnight ago to return thanks to the Committee, for the benefits she had received through the means of this Institution. Her husband being told that his poor boy might be instructed in the Sunday School, generally brings him in his arms morning and evening.

CASE X.

ELIZABETH PELHAM was discovered in a very mean habitation, in Sun Place, Elizabeth Place, Lambeth; with six children, and just put to bed with the seventh. The Visitor found, on conversing with her, that her mind was much superior to the generality of the poor, and was led to a minute enquiry how she came into such a sad condition. She said that herself and her husband had received their education at boarding schools in Isleworth. They had kept a Cabinet-makers' and Upholsterers' Shop in Tottenham Court Road, but through losses he was obliged to give up business and all his effects to his creditors. He then had work as a journeyman in a large manufactory, where he became acquainted with some of the most dissolute characters, whose bad conduct and example soon corrupted his mind. From the most affectionate husband and father, he became a most reprobate man; and in a state of intoxication, to complete her wretchedness, he enlisted for a soldier, and has been for some time away from her. The woman has no dependance for herself and seven children, except the trifle the parish has allowed, and which is now reduced to two shillings per week. Her husband is in Ireland, and is not expected home for two years. She would be thankful for a little needle work, or any thing else she can do, for the support of her family.

CASE XI.

MARY STORRY, No. 1, Frances Buildings, Frances Street, Westminster Road; was found by a Visitor of this Society in very great distress, she had been ill for a month previous to her expected delivery. In her room was found an old bedstead with some straw for a bed, and nothing to cover her but a piece of old rug. There were a few rags in a corner of the room for the children, and two old chairs and an old table, were the whole of their furniture. The woman was almost naked, and quite destitute of the necessaries for her confinement. The family consisted of four small children, and her husband who was out of work. They were supplied with some linen by the Visitor, and a blanket was given them by the Society. She was attended and assisted during her confinement, and she manifested much concern for her everlasting welfare. She had no Bible, but the Visitor procured one from a liberal female friend, for which, and for the help afforded, she was very thankful.

CASE XII.

ELIZABETH JOHNSON, No. 25, Procters Buildings, Lord's Cricket Ground; was found by the Visitor in sad circumstances. Her husband, by trade a plasterer, had been out of employ six weeks. She had been brought to bed a fortnight of her seventh child, which was then dead. On the Visitor making enquiry respecting their circumstances, they told him they had very little to support their family with, having parted with every thing they could spare; the last thing they had disposed of was a Bible, which they had obtained by subscribing one penny per week: this was told by the woman with tears in her eyes; she said they would not have parted with it, but the cries of six children for bread were such, that they were obliged to sell it, in order that they might procure some food. The Visitor relieved them, and called again a few days afterwards; the weather at that time being very severe, and having but little fire, made their case still more distressing. In an adjoining room were three of the children lying on a carpet, with only an old rug to cover them; and to add to their distress, their mother was so much afflicted in her limbs, that she was scarcely able to move. The Visitor again relieved them with a little money, for which they were truly thankful, and on calling the following day found the husband preparing the dinner, which consisted of a few potatoes; the Visitor presented them with some bread and a little more money, which he had procured for them, and they were continued on the books of the Society. Gratitude appeared in every countenance of the family, and was more distinctly seen than can be expressed.

CASE XIII.

ELIZABETH YORK, of Burdett Street, Walworth Common, was found when first visited in great poverty. She was expecting daily to be confined, and had previously been very ill; her husband, who had been a clerk, was out of employ; they had just before this, removed into a house which they had taken of the tenant, instead of the landlord, and no sooner had they entered, than all their goods were seized for rent owing by the former occupier. The brokers left them nothing either to sit or lie upon, not even sparing the few necessaries for the poor womans' confinement.

She was relieved during her lying-in to the utmost limits of the funds, but the relief afforded by the Society was by no means adequate to the necessities of this family, consisting of the man, his wife, and five children. The woman had scarcely recovered from her confinement, when four of the children were taken with the small pox, and were extremely ill.

In this distress, without food, firing, or money; the children frequently crying for hunger; and the parents having none to give them, they were nearly driven to despair. The father feelingly told the Visitor, that the distresses of his family had nearly prompted him to self-murder. They were continued on the books of the Society, and liberally relieved till they recovered.

CASE XIV.

THOMAS RILEY, in a garret, at No. 4, Red Lion Court, Minories; had been afflicted near twelve months with a violent rheumatism in his arms and between his shoulders, which had rendered him incapable of work. He had six children, three of whom are wholly dependant on him; the wife also very ill, but her affliction appeared to be occasioned entirely by grief and the want of common necessities of life, having been obliged through long distress, to part with their clothing, furniture, and at last their bedstead and bed, in order to provide food and pay their rent; so that it may be said they are living in an empty room, not having so much as a bit of straw to lie down upon, and the father, mother, and children, all huddle together upon the bare floor, to keep each other warm. The Visitor, affected at seeing such a scene of distress, relieved them very liberally. It was thought by their manner and appearance they had seen better days, for under such circumstances both themselves and their room were remarkably clean; and upon enquiry it was found that they had lived in much credit he having been for some years mate of a transport, and after that he was master of a brig trading to Gibraltar; but the long affliction they had laboured under, and a dislike to make their case known to their friends and acquaintance, has brought them into the state above described, and they are now on the books of the Society.

CASE XV.

ROBERT WALKER, of Pelham Street, Brick Lane, Whitechapel; a letter founder by trade, but not being able to obtain any work in his own line of business for the last eighteen months, has been obliged to seek a maintenance for his family (consisting of a wife and two children) in another way. He was employed for some time in going round the country to get orders for books, but his earnings were barely sufficient to keep his family from starving, and rather than they should want bread, he himself abstained from taking scarcely any thing for several days together: these privations soon reduced him to such a weak state, as to render him unable to do any thing; and when called on by a Visitor of the Strangers' Friend Society, he was found confined to his bed with an asthmatic complaint, and to all appearance near death. One of the children was also very ill. They had no furniture of their own left, and scarcely any clothes to cover them. Not living in their own parish they had never applied for relief from the one to which they belonged. The Visitor says, "While I was speaking to the poor man, his wife came in with a small piece of bread which a neighbour had just given her, and on my presenting her with two shillings to get some more, she honestly informed me, that a Visitor* from the same Society had been there two days before and had left eighteen pence, which she supposed I was not aware of, and therefore thought it not right to accept what I offered; but on her saying (with tears in her eyes) that the piece of bread she held in her hand was all they had in the world, I could not do otherwise than leave the money.”* The man is regularly visited, but still continues very ill.

CASE XVI.

One of the Visitors received a letter, dated March 18, 1816, the substance of which was as follows:—

“ SIR,

I beg to inform you, of a family residing at No. 3. Lamb's Passage, Chiswell Street; of the name of MOORE, who are fit objects of attention to the Strangers' Friend Society. They are at this moment in the deepest distress; I cannot describe their case in detail, but it is briefly thus:—the husband has very little work, the wife is near her time of lying-in, who is herself very ill through unwearied attention to a daughter, who is now recovering from a dangerous illness, and was yes-

* The public will be affected to hear that so many Cases are often on the Books, that not more than one shilling and sixpence, or two shillings per week can be afforded to such a case as the above; and therefore the Visitor very properly hesitated whether he could relieve the same Case twice in one week.

terday seen eating a potatoe by a miserable fire, which is all that she has had for some time to subsist on. Her mother is very dejected as she has another daughter now extremely ill: I have just now been informed it is the typhus fever, and one of the sons is afflicted with it. I trust you will call and relieve them as soon as possible, one visit only will shew whether they are real objects of distress or not."

On receiving this letter the Visitor called, and found the family destitute of food and money. Three of the children were ill; the eldest, about fifteen years of age appeared near death; he relieved them with six shillings which a friend had given him for that purpose, and called again the next day and relieved them from the funds of the Society. He found the mother also laid on a bed of affliction. Thus four out of the six of the family are so ill that they cannot help each other, and it is feared the fever will go through the whole family. They are of course still on the Books of the Society.

CASE XVII.

A chimney-sweep went to one of the female Visitors to request her to visit MARY WALLACE who was very ill, which from his knowledge arose entirely from want, residing at No. 1, Farm Yard, Camberwell Green.

The Visitor immediately went, and understood that about a year ago, her husband was afflicted with an abscess under his arm. In the winter her sister came there ill of the scarlet fever, her husband and four children caught the infection, during which time they were visited and relieved. When he recovered, trade was so bad he could not get employment. For several months he has been out of work, and she assured the Visitor; that for many days during that time she had passed without a morsel of bread entering her mouth; the only food they could procure for their sustenance was potatoes. Their pallid faces confirmed her declaration.

- These six persons slept on a bed sacking with very little to cover them, one friend, the same evening, sent them some very necessary food, and a few others have subscribed towards procuring them a bed; the Visitor relieved them from the funds, and then made the case known to the Managers of the Society, who sent them liberal help. This case is now on the books.

CASE XVIII.

MARY COX, 19, Leicester Street, Swallow Street; in a most miserable kitchen, so wretched that it appears utterly unfit for the residence of a human being. She formerly lived in a better apartment in the same house but being unable to pay the rent, she, with a girl about four years old, came into this place, expecting daily to be confined. Her husband is a soldier now on foreign service, and had left her pregnant. She was without money, or any thing by the sale of which she could procure any; neither had she any bed, bedding, or furniture. While she could work and was able to obtain employment, she supported herself and child ; but for days she has been even without a morsel of bread. A day or two before she was taken ill, she was in these circumstances, and in the hope of getting something to satisfy her famished child, she sent her into the street. It was night : they had not broken their fast. It was the cry of helpless infancy, perishing for want amidst surrounding plenty. She did not ask in vain ; she soon got twopence, and overjoyed ran with it to her disconsolate mother. A penny worth of bread was obtained, and as the poor woman expected every moment to be taken ill, with the other penny a candle was procured, that when the hour came, she might have at least a light. In the shop where she bought it, she met a kind gentleman who commiserated her case and gave her a few broken victuals, and said he would be a friend to her in her confinement. She was taken ill about four in the morning with no one but her child with her, upon a truss of straw without any covering ; the child ran up stairs and called the people to come as her mother would die. She was safely delivered, and the friend she had met in the shop called on her, and sent in an old bedstead and blanket. She had some fresh straw, and the landlady of the house lent her a piece of an old carpet to cover her. One of the Visitors called on her after she had been in bed a few days ; she was still wretchedly off, but appeared thankful and resigned, and was up, trying to do for the infant which had been ill ; she was very anxious to have it baptized. When the relief he brought her was given, she was so overpowered with joy as to be unable to speak ; in grateful transport she fell with her babe in her arms at his feet, and with streaming eyes and inarticulate sobs, offered thanks which were too big for utterance : the scene was too much ; the Visitor was obliged hastily to run away from an expression of gratitude, he had never seen equalled.

CASE XIX.

DANIEL DOUGHTY, occupying a small damp cellar kitchen, at No. 9, Gibson's Court, Titchborne Street, was long visited by the Society ; he had a wife and one child dependant on him, and being in a deep decline, could of course do little towards their support. As long as he was able he cleaned a few knives and now and then a pair of shoes, but was soon obliged from weakness to give this up, and in silent inactive dejection to witness the progress of disease in himself, and of want and wretchedness in his wife and child. At this season the visits of the Society were particularly serviceable, not only in affording pecuniary relief, but also as they imparted religious instruction. Gradually his mind became enlightened ; he felt his need of salvation ; he sought and found Him, who is the only Saviour of sinners. He was then enabled calmly to wait the end, knowing that if the earthly house of this tabernacle should be dissolved, he had a building above, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. When the reporter of this case visited him last, he was much exhausted ; life seemed fast ebbing away ; his eyes were closed, and apparently all recollection gone ; but on speaking he was instantly recognized by the dying man, who raised himself on the bed, caught him eagerly by the hand, imprinted on it many kisses, and in the language of fervent prayer, invoked heaven's best blessing upon the Friends and Visitors of the Strangers' Friend Society. He lingered a few days and then died in peace.

CASE XX.

JANE LANEY and family, 85, John Street, Tottenham Court Road, were visited on the 11th of June last, and found in circumstances of great distress. The husband occupied their only bed, apparently in a deep decline; the wife expecting daily to be confined; their family already consisted of four children:—to purchase food they had been gradually stripped of their clothes, until there remained to them only a few rags, too worthless to pawn; their apartment was a small cellar kitchen. Previous to this affliction, the man by his earnings as a labourer in the India warehouses, had supported his family with credit and comfort. An effort was made to procure for them some of the clothes and other articles which distress had obliged them to pawn; by the assistance of a benevolent gentleman, to whose liberality the Society is greatly indebted, this was accomplished; and some money also given to procure for the poor man those comforts his situation required. This was attended by the most beneficial effects—on the second visit which a member of the Committee paid to them, he appeared lost for terms in which to express his thankfulness—"By your bounty sir," he said, "my children and myself have been fed—our clothes have been redeemed out of pawn—more nourishing food, and more suitable medicine have been procured for me, by which I have been strengthened, and once more enabled to leave the bed from which I never again expected to rise—I have walked out a little way, and the air has revived me—I begin to hope I may yet be spared, and enabled to earn bread for my family and care for my poor wife when she shall add to the number of it, and be unable to care for us and for herself!" This case was made known to a benevolent lady, who kindly supplied the poor woman with various articles of clothing for her children, self and infant, and money to procure them necessaries. They were visited a long season, until the woman had recovered from her confinement, and the man was able to resume his labour. They were grateful, and it is trusted they are in all respects benefited by the visits of the Society.

It was hoped that the health of the poor man had been permanently restored, the reverse was unhappily the case. Late one Friday Evening one of the Visitors was sent for in haste, to No. 25, Cumberland Street, Middlesex Hospital; (where the family now reside) but before he could get to the place, the man was dead; his last words were prayer for his family and the kind friends who had visited him.—The widow and children are quite unprovided for.

CASE XXI.

A female Visitor entered the garret of No. 6, Parker Street, Drury Lane, in January last, and found a family in a deplorable state. The man and his three children were crouching literally over a handful of fire; there was neither bed, bedstead, table, or other furniture in the room, except two broken chairs. In a corner of the room lay the wife, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, on the floor, covered with an old rug; she was very ill and apparently in labour. Her illness was occasioned by sitting in the cold yard of a workhouse, without either flannel or linen about her, waiting to see if she could be taken into the house. Before it came to her turn to be heard, she was seized with such violent pains, that two of the poor women who were also waiting for relief, led her back to her miserable garret. The husband, a plasterer, had been out of work for nearly six months; they had parted with every thing which would produce a penny, to keep the children from starving. They were instantly relieved and the next morning application was made to the parish officers, who humanely sent further help, with a blanket and some linen. The female Visitors procured a bedstead and a bed of clean straw, with other necessaries, and a friend sent another blanket. On the following day the Visitor was surprised to find the woman so much better, but she said that such a comfortable bed had afforded her a most excellent night. The whole of the family were nearly naked; they were furnished with several articles of clothing; and whenever the Visitors called, which they did frequently, they found the woman industriously employed in repairing and making the most of them. The Visitors had only obtained one sheet, and they determined to buy another. They mentioned some particulars of the Case to a Linen Draper, and he would not receive payment for the sheet, but most kindly presented it to the Visitors for the poor woman. She was not delivered till a fortnight after the first visit, but in the mean time, through the help received, she recovered strength to bear the pains of child-bed; and in all probability was rescued from an untimely grave.

A few evenings after her confinement, it occurred to one of the female Visitors that the poor woman might perhaps be in want, and about ten o'clock that night she sent her a jug of caudle and a shilling, which when the woman saw, she raised her hands to heaven and burst into tears, exclaiming, "I never could have expected this at such a time of night, it must be God Almighty who caused this to be sent in such a time of need."

It appeared that the woman had only a small bit of meat given to her by a poor neighbour, and a two-penny loaf divided among them that day,

The man has not yet met with any employ, and the family is on the books of the Society.

CASE XXII.

JOHN PEARCE, his wife, and three small children were found in a two pair back room in Upper Thames Street. They had lived reputably in Somersetshire, but meeting with various disappointments and losses, the man was induced to come to London, and happily obtained work as soon as he arrived, but before he could send for his wife and children, he was taken ill. When his wife and children came, they found him on a bed of affliction, without a shilling to support him. His wife had with her about three pounds, but their little all was soon exhausted, being in a furnished room for which they paid five shillings per week. Their distress was greatly increased by the wife being also taken ill, but the timely assistance of this Society rescued them from the brink of perishing. All the children were likewise laid up with a bowel complaint, so that the whole family were ill together, without any other means of support than that afforded by the Society. The man is now so far recovered as to be able to earn from seven to twelve shillings per week, the wife and children are also nearly well, but when the Visitor called last Monday, (11th March, 1816,) he found a horse cloth hung up instead of a door, and on entering the room it was quite stripped of all the furniture, and the landlord had with an oath declared he would take out the windows if they did not turn out. He had taken away the door to compel them to quit. The cause of this cruel treatment was, that they had let the rent run to three pounds after being in this distress nearly five months.

The man earned but seven shillings last week, and on Saturday night said to his wife, "My dear we must pay five shillings out of this for a weeks rent;" he had scarcely uttered these words, when the landlord with an officer came and acted as above stated. About two hours after this, a man came up and moved the horse cloth aside, and threw a shilling into the room, and went away without saying a single word. They looked upon this as a providential supply, as they were in destitute circumstances at the time.

They have been on the books about thirteen weeks, and relief is still afforded to them. They have now taken an empty room at No. 21, Bush Lane, Cannon Street, and are going to get a truss of straw to lie on, and a friend has promised to lend them two old chairs and a table.

It is impossible to express the gratitude these people felt towards the Subscribers and Visitors of the Strangers' Friend Society, and other friends, who have been the instruments of relieving them in their distress.

CASE XXIII.

One of the Visitors received a note to visit DOMINICK DUNCOMB, No. 7, Mount Square, Mount Street, Bethnal Green. When he entered the room, he saw a man and his wife and three small children in a most deplorable condition, having scarcely a rag to cover them from the extreme cold. Enquiring into the cause of their distress, it was found they had formerly kept a coal-shed in Bethnal Green, but by giving too much credit, and not being able to get in his debts, he could not meet his creditors bills; in consequence of which they sold the whole of his property, and left him without house or home. After which he took a ready furnished lodging in Turk Street, Bethnal Green, and being taken very ill, and consequently unable to work, he was one fortnight in arrears for rent ; and while he and his wife were gone to the parish doctor, the landlady put a padlock on the door, and turned them into the street. One of the neighbours hearing of their distress gave them leave to sit in one of his empty rooms four nights. The wife being distressed and fatigued applied to the overseer of the parish, who gave them three shillings and sixpence to get a lodging, with which they took an empty room in Mount Square, where they now remain. They were visited and relieved by the Strangers' Friend Society till the man got better. The Visitors applied to the overseers for further relief, who gave them some old sacks and some straw for them to lie upon. They also obtained them the loan of two blankets; for all which they seemed truly grateful.

CASE XXIV.

In December, 1815, JOSEPH KINSIT was visited by one of the Visitors of the Strangers' Friend Society. He lived at No. 4, Virginia Row, Bethnal Green. The Visitor found him extremely ill with the rheumatic gout, which proceeded from a cold he caught while a watchman in the neighbourhood of Finsbury Square. He was by trade a gold-beater, but his business being very slack

he had been out of employ about two years. He has a wife and six small children, and being unable to watch as usual they had sold nearly all their furniture and clothes; and about a week after he was visited from this Society, his wife was confined, which increased their distress. The man declared he had had nothing but potatoes to eat for six weeks, and sometimes he was obliged to go without this food himself to satisfy the hunger of his children. The Visitor gave them immediate relief, and applied to the parish officers, who allowed them only one shilling and sixpence per week during the man's illness. They were very thankful for the visits they received from this Society, and often exclaimed, "You have rescued us from death."

CASE XXV.

In August, 1815, RUTH INMAN, of No. 3, Cambridge Circus, Hackney Road, was visited by this Society. She was by trade a dress-maker, and had three small children. The room in which she dwelt appeared clean and decent, and had a few remains of tolerable furniture. She was sitting, when the Visitor entered the room, weeping by the fire. He inquired the cause of her distress, and found she was the widow of a man who had been a clerk in a mercantile house in the City, but some alteration taking place in the concern he lost his situation: after which he got a place in the London Docks, caught a violent cold which produced a fever, and terminated in his death. About two months after which she was brought to bed of a fourth child. Soon after her lying-in she was seized with a severe illness; one of her children was likewise taken ill, and died. During her illness she had a fistula formed, and was obliged to undergo a surgical operation; indeed, the whole of her sufferings were greater than it is possible to describe. The Visitor gave her immediate relief, for which she seemed thankful even to enthusiasm, exclaiming, with tears of gratitude, "You have saved me from death! surely you are as an Angel from Heaven!" She was visited for many weeks on account of her severe affliction. One time when the Visitor called to see her, she said, "You have been very kind to me, do grant me one favour more before I die?" The Visitor answered, "he would most gladly do any thing for her good." "Then," she said, "do speak to some gentleman to give me the Sacrament, that I may acknowledge before God and him the kindness you have shewed me." The Visitor spoke to a Minister, who kindly went with him and administered the Lord's Supper to her. Two days after which she died, leaving three children, who are taken care of by different friends.

CASE XXVI.

HARRIET BURNET, a young woman about 19, resides at No. 3, Flower and Dean Street, Brick Lane, Whitechapel, was lately recommended to the Strangers'

Friend Society by Mr. Jeffs of the London Dispensary. The Visitors found her in a very weak and reduced state; she had been confined to her room upwards of twelve months, greatly afflicted with abscesses in different parts of her body. During this illness she had been almost entirely dependent on her poor, industrious mother, who is a widow. Her mother has had employ in making slop work, but latterly, owing to the scarcity of work, she has had nothing to do for several weeks together; and had a son as well as this afflicted daughter to support out of her scanty earnings. The family when first visited were reduced to the lowest ebb of poverty; and the mother assured the Visitor, that neither of them had taken any thing but a bit of dry bread for three days previous to his calling, and that she was unable even to raise twopence to obtain two quarts of soup from the Soup Society. — Both the mother and daughter expressed the warmest emotions of gratitude for the relief which a kind Providence had sent them through the Strangers' Friend Society. The visits have been continued for some time, and the young woman, of whom little hopes were entertained, is likely, by proper nourishment and care, to recover her health.

CASE XXVII.

SARAH DAY, a widow, Crown Court, Golden Lane, St. Luke's, was found in a very distressed situation. Her husband having been ill a great part of the last five years of his life, during which time the care of the whole family chiefly devolved on the poor woman: when he died, she was left with six children, and in a pregnant state; and when she lay-in, her distress was extreme. It was then that the aid of this Society was peculiarly seasonable. During her pregnancy she had hurt herself by carrying too heavy a load, which brought on a complaint that greatly endangered her life, and her illness continued many weeks. She was kept on the books of the Society till she got better, and was able to follow her employment. Two of her children likewise obtained situations; and lately one of the Visitors called on her, to whom she expressed the most lively gratitude to her benefactors for their assistance in the time of her extreme necessity.

CASE XXVIII.

A West Indian, living in Hooper Street, Apollo Fields, Westminster Road, by trade a carpenter, was found by a Visitor of the Society in extreme distress, having been out of employ for a considerable time. When the Visitor entered the poor habitation she was much affected at the wretched appearance of this family—the man, with grief depicted in his countenance, but of pleasing address and manners, with six small children about him, in a very small room and no fire. On enquiring for his wife, he said she was up stairs, and on entering the room, the Visitor was surprised to find it so clean. The wife had been confined to her bed for nearly nine months; her sufferings were very great, but she did not murmur or repine. She said she had a kind doctor, and a very kind and indulgent husband. Although it was very unpleasant for him, he was obliged to do for her that which was only proper for a woman to do, to clean and wash for her and the children—and he did it cheerfully. He went out to work when he had any thing to do, and when he came home he did all that was necessary for his family. He is not in any club, and has no parish relief. The assistance granted by this Society was very acceptable.

CASE XXIX.

JOANNA KEEFE was visited by the Strangers' Friend Society during her illness, at No. 3, Charles Street, Drury Lane; and when recovering, it was requested that the female Visitors would call on her, as she was entirely destitute of clothing, which was found to be literally the case, except an old black gown. Her husband had been a sailor, and was discharged on the return of peace, at Yarmouth, where he married, and came to London, expecting to get employ as a bricklayers' labourer; but here his expectations failed, and he was out of work twenty weeks, during which time they parted with all their clothes, till they had nothing left that would fetch sixpence. After this they suffered much from want. At one time the poor man was without food four days, till at length he fell down in the street, and was taken home apparently lifeless. At another time he fasted two days, when he fell again through extreme weakness. The poor wife would have shared the same fate, but for the people in the house, (who were all Irish except herself) who supplied her in his absence with cold potatoes, which saved her from perishing. She also added, that she has begged of her husband to go and get her a bit of bread or a few potatoes, and after waiting some hours in anxiety he would return without either, and tell her to try and pray to God, and he would send something by the morning, for that he could not beg. He was recommended to make application to the parish, when he was told to bring his wife there next board-day, and accordingly she was wrapped in a blanket and taken; and after staying in the yard several hours they were sent away without any thing. In this extremity the poor man went to try if he could get a birth on board an Indiaman, but could procure no money in advance, and consequently not willing to leave his wife sick; and in a strange place he gave himself up to despair.

When the poor woman was able to go out she went to Covent Garden with her husband to endeavour to earn a little; and when they had procured a load the man absolutely fell under it. They then endeavoured to carry it between them, and in this their strength failed, when a humane woman took the basket for them and gave them the money. A few friends supplied them with raiment, took them from their wretched habitation, and furnished a decent room for them. A friend of the Institution was so fortunate as to get him into work, where he was for some months, and gave every satisfaction, till they had no longer employ for him; when, providentially, a gentleman wanted a man in his counting-house, with whom he engaged, and where he conducts himself with propriety. They are honest, sober, and industrious people.

CASE XXX.

A family of the name of WOODWARD were found, March 4, 1816, in great distress, occupying a small apartment at 32, Cato Street. The man is a journeyman tailor, and for many months has had little or no work; the woman has been ill eighteen months, and is apparently in a deep decline. She is now confined to their only bed, laid on a few rags, with scarcely any covering. The bed is placed in a small unventilated closet, which is so offensive, that a Member of the Committee, though accustomed to visit the sick poor, was unable to remain in the place without the door and window of the adjoining room being opened—Their four children, all young, are with them. They have all been ill—first with the small pox—afterwards with the measles—so that the poor man has had all his family ill on his hands, and none to care for them but himself. He was employed, when first visited, washing their faces, and seemed to have been ironing their pinbefores to make them a little decent. The woman is attended by the parish doctor, but they have no parochial relief. All the clothes except the rags they wore, and every article of furniture except the bedstead, three broken chairs, and a rickety table, were gone. The place and family were altogether as desolate and wretched as the Reporter of this Case ever witnessed.—Such relief as the state of the funds would allow was given, together with a few articles of clothing which had been sent to the Society by a benevolent gentleman. An effort was also made to procure them a little extra relief—the woman's state, which appears to be hopeless, demanding comforts which they have not means of procuring.

CASE XXXI.

On the 26th November, 1815, JOHN MALLOWBY, 10, John Street, Edgware Road, was visited. He had been a soldier, and served in Portugal, where he encountered the difficulties and suffered the privations incident to a military life. On his return home he was discharged, and with a view of getting an honest livelihood he began business as a green grocer—but, through affliction and sickness, he was unable to attend properly to his little affairs, and failed. Their goods were sold for rent. With a spirit and constitution alike broken, he could not bear up under his distresses, and fell into a rapid decline. He was unable to follow any employment, and depended solely on his wife, who worked at her needle for his support. She was far advanced in pregnancy, and could do less and less daily, till at last being put to bed by the side of her dying husband, all means of support for herself, her babe, or its father, at once ceased.—In this state they were found by the Visitors, and their wants promptly attended to. They were carefully visited till the death of the poor man, and the recovery of the widow.

CASE XXXII.

MARY FOUNTAIN, 17, George Street, Portland Chapel, was visited 21st of January, 1816. She had been put to bed a few days of her second child, in a small damp kitchen. Her husband is a soldier, now abroad. She had for some time been unwell, and not able to continue those exertions by which she had been accustomed to provide for herself and child, or to make any suitable preparation for the time of her confinement. She was in debt to her landlady, and wholly destitute ;—had had a very bad time, and seemed to be in considerable danger. She sent to the parish for relief, but several days elapsed before her application was attended to.

The Case was visited by a Member of the Committee, who called to see her in the evening a little past seven o'clock. She had no fire or coals—and to procure a candle, had sold a phial, in which she had had medicine, for a penny. It was standing on a broken table near the bed with matches and tinder box, in order that if the child awoke she might be able to procure a light. Her eldest child was ill in bed by her side. She had none of those nourishing things so requisite at such a time—the only article of food in the place being a small loaf sent in by a friend.—For a person in such a situation, every thing appeared particularly desolate and wretched. All was done for her that could be done. She recovered, and brought her infant when she came to the Committee to return thanks for the benefits she had received.

A Visitor, who has reported some of the Lying-in Cases, observes that, if those who have become mothers under happier circumstances, knew a twentieth part of the miseries suffered by the poor on such occasions, they would give liberally in aid of those Institutions which, in the abodes of poverty, seek out poor women in their low estate, and, when the hour of travail arrives, try to support and cheer them in the pains and perils of childbirth—which soothe the first cries of wailing infancy, and endeavour to make the heart of the mother rejoice that a child is born into the world, by furnishing her with the means of sustaining herself and her new-born babe. Such an Institution is the Strangers' Friend Society; and, in behalf of it, the Committee, in the present low state of the Funds, may confidently appeal to human nature as it exists in the hearts of mothers, assured that such Cases cannot be mentioned without exciting their tenderest sympathy.

1816, January 20th. We have audited the above Accounts, and find a Balance in the Hands of the Treasurer of
 One Hundred and Three Pounds, Three Shillings.
 JOSEPH BULMER,
 JOHN TOWNEND.

Form of a Testamentary Bequest.

I GIVE and bequeath to the Treasurer, for the time being, of the Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend Society for relieving the Sick and distressed Poor at their own Habitations, meeting at the New Chapel, City-road, London, of which William Marriott, Esq. is, or lately was, the Treasurer, the Sum of
to be paid out of my personal estate, to be applied towards carrying on the benevolent purposes of the said Society.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are received by Mr. MARRIOTT, Treasurer, Broad-street, Royal Exchange ; Mr. H. CLARKE, 52, New Bond-street, & Mr. W. COOPER, 8, Queen-street, Cheapside, Secretaries ; MESSRS. OWEN, and ELLIOTT, 31, Gutter-lane, Cheapside ; JOSEPH BUTTERWORTH, Esq. and Son, 43, Fleet-street ; MESSRS. MIDDLETON, INNES, and JONES, 192, Fleet-street ; MESSRS. CONDELL, CLARKE, and POWLEY, New Bond-street ; Mr. ALLAN, Frederic's-place, Old Jewry ; by each Member of the Committee ; Mr. JARRETT, Collector, 27, Providence-row, Finsbury-squareⁿ ; MESSRS. CHATTERIS and Co. Bankers, 21, Lombard-street ; MESSRS. HOARES, Bankers, Fleet-street ; MESSRS. BIRCH, CHAMBERS, and HOBBS, Bankers, New Bond-street.

THE Committee respectfully and earnestly request the Friends of the Institution to favor them with any useless or cast-off Clothes, for either Men, Women, or Children. Many instances are continually coming to their knowledge of families and individuals recovering from long sickness, who in the time of their distress, have parted with their furniture, clothes, &c. and have no money to procure them again when recovered; some for want of an old coat or gown, have not been able to procure employment. The Committee and Visitors pledge themselves, that all due care shall be taken that such Donations be given to the most necessitous and deserving objects.

The following Persons have kindly offered to receive any articles that may be sent them.

- Messrs. OWEN and ELLIOTT, 31, Gutter-lane, Cheap-side;
- Mr. MATHISON, 52, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn Fields;
- Mr. TRIMBEY, 125, Whitechapel;
- Mr. COLLINS, Fox's-lane, Shadwell;
- Mr. UNWIN, Crosby-row, Snow-fields;
- Mr. THOMAS WRIGHT, 2, Mount-street, Lambeth Turnpike;
- Mr. HOBBS, 119, Oxford-street;
- Mr. SPRATT, 2, Brewer-street, Pimlico.
